

FREEDOM HOUSE

PROGRAM OVERVIEW Freedom House provides residential treatment for alcohol and/or drug dependent pregnant women and women with young children. The holistic and comprehensive program is designed to treat the women's chemical dependency, to break the cycle of addiction in families, to reunite families broken apart by addiction and to promote the birth of healthy, drug-free babies.

Using an evidenced-based clinical services model of recovery and holistic, family-centered treatment, Freedom House addresses the cycle of addiction with children while simultaneously treating their mothers. The program offers individual, group and family counseling; drug and alcohol dependency education; parenting classes; life skills training; nutrition classes; vocational training and employment services; and child care services. As of January 2018, 155 babies have been born healthy to women in the program since its creation, ensuring a healthy start to their lives.
